Honokono, July 90th, 1885.

So many sensational reports, many of them very conflicting, have of late been started anent Korea and its affairs that a general feeling of doubt as to the future of that country must have been begotten. The pcningular kingdom is undoubtedly tributary to Chins, and has been so for centuries. There is undeniable evidence of this fact, and few persons will venture to dispute it. But the Chinese Government, with characteristic apathy, allowed Korea first to drift into difficulties with Japan, and then left her to get out of them as she could and to make a treaty with the Mikado as a sovereign state. That was nine years ago, and the reason to anticipate trouble. But when some years later further trouble arose between Japan and Korea, which was subsequent to the reduction of the Loochoo island kingdom to a ken of the Japanese empire, then left Singapore for this port yesterday. the Chinese Government began to grow uneasy. The fear that Korea might become them to actively intervene in July, 1882, Seoul, and troops were sent there, the Dai In Kun made prisoner, and a garrison stationed in the capital. Meantime the Viceroy of Child land scented danger from the north, and fearing an attempt on the part of Russia to secure a position on the Korean coast, he persuaded the Korean Government of the advisability of entering into treaties with Western States. In the course of a letter written by His Excellency LI HUNG-CHANG to a Korean statesman in 1851, he sets forth his reasons for advising Korea to emerge from her isolation. antidote to po.son. Japan's aggressive designs upon Korea will be best frustrated by the latter's alliance with Western nations. and that Japan is infected with 'nibbling' proponsities can scarcely be doubted. China herself is preparing to oppose them, but Korea will hardly be able to do so unassisted. Her best plan is to establish commercial relations with foreign countries, and employ them for the purpose. Western international law forbids unjustifiable aggression, States like Belgium and Denmark are thus enabled to preserve their territories intact. is not without measce. peared to Li to be Korea's most dangerous neighbour, but he has since altered his opinion. Japan has refrained not only from seeking territory in Korea, but has foreborne from making any attempt to exercise any paramount influence there. Moreover, she has contented berself with a very modest strategic importance to the east of China, and it is more than probable that Russia will desire to take possession of that peninsula before carrying her designs in the East any further. To do so would only be consistent with the policy she has pursued for the last three centuries, and for which she is always careful to be prepared. In the beginning her territories were confined to Europe; next, we find her in Central closest friendship between Korea and China | THE P. & O. STEAMER "KASHGAR

Asia, and now she has got so far east that Korea is in imminent danger.' Kwo then proceeds to advocate, as the best means of checking Muscovite aggression, the and a union with Japan and America. The imminence of the danger has at length brought about something like a fulfilment of a portion of this far-sighted Chinaman's previsions. China and Japan have seemingly come to a thorough understanding on the question, and the Chinese Government 121 appear to have assumed an active protectorate over Korea, in which Japan has acquiesced. The recent proclamation of the Chinese Commissioner for Commerce in Korea, in which he speaks of the kingdom as one of the vassal states of China, is one indication of this, and the tone of the Japanese is another sign that the Governments of Peking and Tokio have some tacit or secret agreement to act in concert against any attempt of Russia to obtain a foothold in Korea. from Russian aggression, the peril to [1370 China is greatly lessened. The consciousness of a danger brings home the necessity of taking steps to avert it. But if baffled now, Russia will not resign her schemes. They may be delayed, but her patience is exhaustless, and she will wait and watch for
